At first scattered selling on the part bolders of wheat met with but little demand from buyers, and led to a mode rate decline in quotations, with bearish traders contending that a considerable improvement in export business would be necessary to bring about any decided advance. No sales for export however, were announced, and favorable crop reports octed also as a bearish influence during the early dealings.

It was at this juncture that future delivery wheat buying developed which came to a liberal extent from interests that generally operate on foreign account. Besides goestp was current that Germany had acquired a good deal of Argentine grain which was on ocean passeze and which previously was without sufficient backing. Under such circum-stances gains were fairly well maintained t the last despite talk that the suppose foreign buying of future deliveries had been really for a Chicago trader who was trying to keep out of view.
